LOVE IN THE SHADOW OF ANCIENT HILLSIDES

Robert LaFleur, Beloit College, Beloit, Wisconsin (USA)

Abstract: This lecture will focus upon the many stories of love found and love lost in the Classic of Songs (Shijing), one of the most significant works in all of Chinese history. In particular, the lecture will look at those tales through the lens of one of the most brilliant interpreters of early China, the French social theorist Marcel Granet (1884–1940). Granet writings piece together an elaborate picture of the great spring festivals of ancient times, with families uniting in social concord, and young people pairing off together, first in amorous intrigue, and next in marriage. We will analyze some of the key poems Granet employed, and examine several angles in which these themes of love found their way into other important works in Chinese history and literature.

LOVE IN RECENT CHINESE SCIENCE FICTION

Holger Briel, United International College, Zhuhai (China)

Abstract: Over the last decade, Science Fiction has developed into a major genre in Chinese entertainment. Beginning with Liu Cixin winning the 2015 Hugo Novel Award for his The Three Body Problem series to the huge success of Frant Gwo's The Wandering Earth motion film, and to the very popular Shimalaya audiobook podcasts, people have begun noticing Science Fiction. In this lecture, there will be discussions about the reasons for Science Fiction's recent appeal among the Chinese and abroad, how the notion of love has come to play an important role in its Chinese variant, and how this allows researchers to draw conclusion about Science Fiction's greater role in contemporary Chinese society.

UNIVERSAL LOVE AND HUMANISM IN CHINESE PHILOSOPHY AND BEYOND

David Bartosch, Beijing Normal University at Zhuhai, Zhuhai (China)

Abstract: The topic of universal love and humanism is a topic in Chinese philosophy since the days of Mozi (470–391 BCE) and the Mohist school. In a different context, it came to fruition in the Neo-Confucian discourses of the Learning of the Self-organizing Principle (Lixue) and the Learning of the Heart-mind (Xinxue) during Song dynasty and Ming dynasty. Two important thinkers in these contexts are Zhu Xi (1130–1200 and Wang Yangming (1472–1529). The different schools have developed divergent approaches how to translate the idea of universal love and a universal humanism into existence. These will be discussed under the background of the history of Chinese philosophy and also by making transcultural references to other traditions. It will also be discussed what people can infer from this for our present-day situation and the future development of mankind.
